For the ancient Greeks, Aion is the god of eternity who does not need to devour anything to be eternal, he is a child and an old man, the generous and satisfied god who makes sense in himself, the god who does not contemplate goals or plans, it invites us to an action that makes sense in itself. Cazador del tiempo
Para los antiguos griegos, Aion es el dios de la eternidad que no necesita devorar nada para ser eterno, es un niño y un anciano, el dios generoso y satisfecho que tiene sentido en sí mismo, el dios que no contempla objetivos ni los planes, sino que nos invita a una acción que tiene sentido en sí misma.

50 ml

Many times the call to Peace requires finding alternative, diverse and divergent paths. Breaking schemes does not mean destroying everything, it is rather flooding everything with our best intentions.

On Good Friday in 1958, thousands gathered in Trafalgar Square in London to protest against nuclear weapons. They were responding to a series of test explosions carried out by the United Kingdom, the third nation to join the nuclear club after the United States and the USSR. Over the next four days, the bravest marched to Aldermaston, a small town 50 miles west of London, where British nuclear weapons were designed and stored. On the posters and banners of the protesters, a new symbol was making its first appearance. Gerald Holtom, designer and pacifist, had developed it from the letters 'N' and 'D' of the traffic light alphabet, the code used by sailors.

Grotte Cosquer, is an underwater cave containing prehistoric paleolithic paintings. The grotto is located east of Marseille, in the Calanque de la Triperie, near Cape Morgiou. Its entrance is located about 37 m below the level of the Mediterranean Sea, and it is thought that it could have been used as a sanctuary between 27,000 and 19,000 BC, before its entrance was covered due to rising sea levels. The grotto has more than 200 figures, corresponding to the Gravetian phase and the Solutrean phase.

Reggio's origins are lost between archeology and mythology: it was, probably from the end of the 3rd millennium BC, inhabited by pelagic populations from Ashkenazios, Ausonians, Enotrios and, finally, by the Italos, a city called Erythrà ("The Red One") by the Calcides. It was an important and flourishing polis of Magna Grecia surrounded by numerous districts that had fortifications in front of the island of Sicily, it was later a Roman municipium and seat of the Corrector of Lucania and Brucia, as well as being a hub of commercial, maritime and land networks throughout the entire classical age. Via Regilia (or Via Annea) left from Regium, a road built in the 2nd century BC. that reached Capua, and from there to Rome. From its port called "Rhegina Column", to the north of the city, boats left for Sicily, and from its ancient Greek port, to the south of the city, for the entire Mediterranean
